

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What is the Edtech Industry Network?

The Edtech Industry Network is a community of Edtech solution providers of all sizes interested in engaging with each other and ISTE to understand industry trends and solve challenges faced by the industry.

How will the Edtech Industry Network help my company?

The Edtech technology industry is constantly evolving, and the requirements and expectations for solution providers continue to rise as more technology becomes available to students and educators. The Industry Network seeks to be a space for Edtech companies to connect in a non-competitive environment to hear from educators and experts about market trends, challenges, and strategies to help improve the effectiveness of solution development. Members will also participate in exclusive collaborative opportunities, like user feedback sessions, advisory councils, and solution-based focus groups with ISTE partners. What is the time commitment?

Companies will have the opportunity to spend as much time as they would like to attend Industry Network events. However, ISTE encourages all members to take advantage of the many resources and opportunities to connect, learn, and share with other members.

Who should be the primary contact?

The primary contact should be someone who can speak to your organization's goals (e.g. C-level Executives and Product Leaders) and alert the appropriate person to opportunities within the network. A representative from your organization can apply for membership to the Edtech Industry Network, but the applicant applying does not have to be the person that participates in network meetings or events. Each company can have up to three representatives attend Industry Networking meetings and events.

How much does it cost to be a member of the Edtech Industry Network?

The annual membership fee is $2,000. Active members will receive a renewal notice in advance of the end of the term year with no obligation to renew. Membership fees are nonrefundable, and benefits and fees are subject to change without notice.
